

Remploy

Putting ability first

Remploy

Remploy is a leading provider of specialist employment services to people who experience complex barriers to work. Remploy employs over 700 people and provides an Occupational Health service to its employees by offering medical advice and guidance, a low level absence management and health surveillance. A new vocational rehabilitation approach was identified to provide benefits for both Remploy and its employees where the functional vocational and psychological aspects of each case are considered with barriers being identified and addressed.

Remploy commissioned Nine Feet Tall to set up and manage the project to implement the new Occupational Health service to its employees.

“Nine Feet Tall provided the quality of service that it has consistently delivered to Remploy throughout its relationship with the PMO, bringing real project management expertise to supplement our internal project management structure. They were instrumental in enabling us to deliver a highly sensitive and valuable service to our business”

Carole Pinfold

Remploy Employment Services, Programme Office Manager

Project Management Activities

1. Developed the project initiation document for sign off by the Project Sponsor
2. Managed the project plan ensuring milestones were achieved on time
3. Managed and escalated risks and issues
4. Engaged stakeholders by keeping them informed
5. Managed the requirements for a new IT system and researched the options
6. Reported on project progress to the project team and Sponsor
7. Managed weekly project team meetings and monthly steering group meetings

“Our work with Nine Feet Tall and their experience help drive the PMO team to deliver real value and sustainable improvements to our business. It is a perfect example of the kind of partnership working which Remploy values”

Sue Butcher

Remploy Employment Services, HR Director